

Hello... from Heaven - Happy Thanksgiving to all, and happy All Saints' Day

November is All Saints' Day. It is also Thanksgiving.

My husband passed on the 19th of November 2016. I realized this year that the 19th of November was also my name day. We celebrate Saint Elizabeth on November 19th. My mom never missed calling me on that day to remind me of Saint Elizabeth's day.

My mom also said I married a saint, which means she thought Dietrich was a saint.

This year I got a "Hello" ...from Heaven.

True love can travel everywhere. It is the most powerful and healing force, and this true love can never be broken. It is the bond that links us to our family, our lineage. Belief that we continue our life in the spirit world is now more prominent than before. Every time we connect with a loved one in that other realm, we are making bridges between the two worlds.

It is a new union where we communicate with mental telepathy, and a highly tuned intuition, receiving information and guidance through our psychic senses, and we become an antenna with receptivity. Energy of thought travels fast. You hear things you are not supposed to hear, but maybe you are; things you do not hear usually. I also communicate with my husband through feelings.

The universal life force, which I could translate as God's energy and love for His children, is present everywhere, and sometimes more so in special places on earth like for example the vortexes in Sedona, Arizona, in the Italian Alps near Torino and my mountain hometown in Saint Jean. In the Celtic tradition they are called "thin places" where the veil between this world and the next has been lifted; where the door between our world and the next has been opened.

Sometimes between the state of sleeping and awakening, I can get a message from the other side.

Close to the anniversary of my husband's passing, I was awakened by hearing a song in my mind "Hello Darlin!" and then the sentence popped up "Hello...from Heaven."

I then continued about my day.

Happy Thanksgiving to all, and happy All Saints' Day.
