1st Prize Winner:

"72 Hours" by David Garand

David Garand studies pure and applied science in Montreal, Québec. He enjoys cooking, playing guitar and flute. He became interested in photography and filmmaking in 2011. David says that "72 Hours" is an attempt to describe the experience and insights he had during 3 days when he tried to practice the first 5 Buddhist precepts as part of a project for his Eastern Religions class. Christian Sullivan helped as an assistant cameraman.

2nd Prize Winner:

"To Build a Home" by Aiyana Adshead

Aiyana Adshead, 19, resides in Maple Valley in Washington state. She explains that "To Build a Home" is about her relationship with her father, her struggles after he started the NextGen Academy program, and how she overcame feelings of abandonment through "receiving God's love through (my) parents."

Judilee King, 21, helped with cinematography and editing.

3rd Prize Winner:

"Mr. Shu at the Riverbank" by Jae Malabunga

Jae Malabunga, who currently is participating in the Generation Peace Academy program of Lovin Life Ministry, explains that "Mr Shu at the Riverbank" is the story of a student and a teacher, and is based upon his own experiences with someone who deeply impacted Jae's life, before passing on into the spiritual world.
