

Short history

Bridging the Gulf is the 6th project in a series that brings Palestinian and Israeli children together. The first one was launched in 2015 by the UPF chapters of Israel and San Marino. The following projects brought youth for a week of inspiring interaction every summer until the recent outbreak of the pandemic. The friendships that have developed among the youth have brought their families together to create a growing community that experiences a new culture of heart and peace. The children were warmly welcomed by youth from the hosting nations as well as officials such as the head of state.

The project received generous sponsorship, both from local associations and from individuals in Christian, Jewish and Muslim communities.

Vision

Art, music and sports - especially soccer - can create a natural environment for bringing conflicting societies together. Children can find immediate common ground, a great way to bridge the cultural divide. As the joy of the game or the cultural activity lifts its participants up, they can see each other as members of one great universal family beyond ethnicity, religion, nationality, or race

Mission

Create a joint Arab-Jewish team, consisting of sixteen 13-year-old kids, and invite them for a life changing visit to a different country. Through interaction with kids of their age group from the hosting vicinity they are able to develop deep friendships with one another.
