In today's news, we take a look at how our community is listening and engaging in the national conversation, the last few days of Chosen, an important notice about shipping, and seminary opens their (virtual) doors.

Listen and Learn

Lifting Up the Black Voices of Our Community

As thousands of people protest racial discrimination in cities across the U.S. after the death of George Floyd, recent events have sparked conversations everywhere, involving people of all races. Unificationists are also sharing their thoughts and experiences as leaders encourage everyone to listen and learn.

Chigo Ahunanya, a young black Unificationist from Malta blessed in marriage with an Asian-American wife, was one of four speakers invited to share their personal experiences during the Boston community discussion. "I think there are certain biases, and people of color have experiences where we have felt lesser because of the color of our skin," said Ahunanya. "It's something that manifests in many communities, but I think what's happening right now is a wake up call for a lot of people."

"I feel so grateful to those who have taken the time over the last several days to reflect, reach out to one another and listen to one another," said Rev. Dunkley. "I hope we can all learn from and join those initiatives."
