On June 3, Olga Vakulinskaya, President of WFWP Russia, was invited by the social movement, "Parents of Moscow" to speak to parents on the topic: "Trustful Relationship With Children Is A Way To Understand, To Guide and To Help." Some parents attended the event in person, but many were able to view the event through Youtube and Instagram live stream.

The social movement "Parents of Moscow" promotes moral values, family values and quality offline education for children. During the event, the discussion emphasized the importance of a close heartistic relationship with children, as well as the need for spending quality time together. This can be in the form of one-on-one conversations with children, so that they feel that they can openly and freely share their feelings. The issue of excessive use of electronic devices was also raised in the discussion of practical ways to protect children from the influence of the negative environment.

After the program finished, many parents asked questions and expressed their concerns about their own children. Through listening to other parents and sharing their own experiences as parents, the participants came to the conclusion that if they don't make a serious effort to build a relationship of trust with their children, then that precious time is lost to form a beautiful relationship. Without building this strong bond between parent and child, it becomes difficult and even impossible for children to make healthy decisions for their long-term happiness.

The event concluded on a strong note, with the parents' new redetermination to invest their energy in building better relationships in their own families and becoming the best example to their children. Through this event, parents confirmed the need for moral education in the family and were reminded of the vital role parents play in creating sustainable peace in the world.
