At the end his message "The Final Step To Our Perfection" given on November 3, 1991, Hyo Jin Nim spoke for a few minutes about hunting: You all know I like hunting. That is the only thing that stimulates me physically. But even simple hunting... Many times I catch a deer and I want to offer it to Father. I want to cook it up and serve it to Father. From the point of my desire to the point of actually putting the venison on the plate and offering it to Father is a pretty long process. It’s a pretty long process to offer Father a piece of meat.

Big bucks especially have very keen senses. So if you are lucky enough to be facing a big buck, you’ve got one chance and you’ve got to make that chance count. If you are really lucky, you might get a second chance, but normally if you miss a deer, he’s gone. He’s in the next county. In order to make that shot perfect, you have to practice. Be sure, when you make that shot, that it hits where it counts.

In his interview (printed in the Spring 1988 Blessing Quarterly, p. 36-43), Dr. Joon Ho Seuk said:

After the CARP Convention in Germany [1987] last year, Father called us to Alaska. I was just expecting to go fishing with him. Fishing in Alaska is very calm, very enjoyable. But Hyo Jin Nim wanted to go hunting. Father said to go hunting with him.

I thought we would go hunting nearby, but we were dropped off by a small airplane which really looked like vintage material to me! I asked the pilot how old the plane was and he said, "It was built in 1945." We were dropped off on a small island and the pilot said goodbye and that he’d be back in four days! We didn’t bring enough food with us — no kimche, no rice, just some ham and cheese sandwiches. We had a little ramen for dinner. Then we climbed through the thick forest, with Hyo Jin Nim leading us. Hunting and climbing up mountains are external activities. He was always far ahead of us, leading us. It was symbolic of his role. He showed such a spirit of perseverance, courage, and indomitability. He did it quietly. He did not say so much, but demonstrated it, showing an example. He is a very quiet person.

From three days of intensive hunting training with Hyo Jin Nim, I had a very memorable educational experience and I really rediscovered his loving heart, his humility, his strong determination, and his iron will power.

Several years later, on February 26, 2006, Hyo Jin Nim said:

I used to like hunting, but I stopped because I didn’t want to kill anymore. But what a great feeling killing your first deer together with your son.
