It was a pleasant trip up to Glasgow on the Easter weekend. I was invited to present a 1-day Divine Principle Seminar for new guests and members in our new Peace Embassy, right in the heart of the city. We had 7 new guests listening to the lectures for the first time, Ambassadors for Peace and members totaling 25 in all! The lectures focused on chapter 1, with successive topics planned for online discussion in the coming weeks.

Presentations were kept to 40 minutes with time for Q and As and plenty of songs to galvanize the attendees and invite the holy spirit! Guests were also invited up to lead the singing too, which was great audience participation.

I felt the whole event was well organized by our Scottish family, and our Peace Embassy there is perfect for holding such activities. A big shout out to our FFWPU board: Maryann McDonald who designed all the promotional material, Eric Williamson, who seamlessly managed the tech and was an excellent MC, Vierra Jaupi who brought 2 of her relatives to the event and Ann Breslin, who brought 6 guests and who with husband David, hosted me at their house during my stay.

I was happy to give the sermon on Easter Sunday, the topic "The Road Less Travelled" reflecting on our lives as pioneers. It was great to see the faces of members I hadn't seen for a while, who also came to receive the Special Grace, which was held after the service.

As an expression of Glasgow hospitality, I was treated to a couple of rounds of bowling, compliments of Patrick and Annabella McCluskey.... and they even let me win!

All in all, it was a wonderful weekend and I really felt the spirit moving in our Scottish region. It will be really great to see some of those who joined come to the 7-day DP workshop at Livingstone House, planned for June 30th.
