Amenophis IV [also known as Akhenaten]

Here is something interesting about the history of Egypt and its relationship to the rest of the Islamic world. It concerns the appearance of a pharaoh named Amenophis IV [also known as Akhenaten] and his reign beginning about 1360 B. C. This king is unique in ancient Egyptian history because he officially introduced monotheism for the first time in that kingdom. If you look at the parallels of history chart you'll see a correspondence to the appearance of Mohammed and his teaching of monotheism to the polytheistic Arab kingdoms, 2,000 years later.

The exact dates could vary according to whose accounting system you use to establish periods of kings' reigns and their dates.

Nevertheless, everything is according to Heavenly Father's plan and it only reveals how much He has invested himself.
