From January 11 to 26, a two-day Divine Principle seminar was held at the Uruguay National Garden. The event aimed to deepen participants' understanding of the Divine Principle and support the spiritual foundation of new guests. There were 22 attendees in total, including 11 primary participants and supporting staff.

Among the participants, nine were new guests beginning their introductory studies. For two of these guests, this marked their first-ever seminar, while the group also included two second-generation youth.

The lectures were tailored to the participants' ages and levels of understanding, allowing them to relate the teachings to their personal lives. Many attendees actively shared reflections, expressing a strong desire to continue their studies. To complement the learning, recreational activities and icebreaker games were organized to foster fellowship and trust. These sessions created a warm, open environment that encouraged both connection and spiritual growth.

Overall, the seminar served as a meaningful educational experience, establishing a vital foundation for the participants' continued spiritual journeys.
