What lessons can be learned from the health crisis?

Health systems and their management under the spotlight

As our nations face the reality of a second extended lockdown, we see a lot of finger-pointing. Government decisions are criticized for being too fast, or too slow; ill-informed, unbalanced in favor of the economy, unbalanced in favor of the health of the elderly, and sometimes confusing. Multiple non-Covid health issues are sidelined, poverty, loneliness, and pure frustration haunt millions.

What lessons can be learned? Are there good models to follow? Is it possible to improve the systems on which we depend: health systems, democratic governance, the role of scientific research in serving the citizens of the world?
