We have seven days until December 1, the start of Mother's trial. Her situation is urgent, and the work required to protect her safety and secure her release is extensive, much of which cannot be shared publicly.

We're over halfway to our goal of $250,000 by December 1. These funds will support the ongoing efforts on the ground, including the U.S. delegation that will attend the first day of the trial, as well as the critical support work happening around the world.

Many of you have reached out to know what you can do to help beyond prayers and online engagement. Large or small, your offering is part of our collective responsibility to protect True Mother. Thank you for your support!

Newt Gingrich's Op-ed Calls for True Mother's

Release

Newt Gingrich printed an op-ed in three major Korean newspapers: Chosun Ilbo; Kyunghyang Shinmun; and Hankook Ilbo. When America’s former Speaker of the House has to remind Seoul that free nations don’t jail faith leaders, you know the crisis has gone too far. Here’s an excerpt:

The Korea–U.S. Alliance Is a Values Alliance

by Newt Gingrich

The recent arrest of Unification Church President Dr. Hak Ja Han is more than a religious matter.

It raises serious questions about democratic values, religious freedom, and civic space in a key ally of the United States.

For decades in the U.S. Congress and public life, I have consistently emphasized that religious freedom, human rights, and democracy are essential to global stability. From that perspective, the judicial actions taken by the Korean government should not be regarded lightly.

In free societies, religious leaders are not arrested for their religious activities or the way they run their church. To do so, would constitute a direct infringement of the core democratic principle of freedom of religion and conscience.

Religious freedom specifically is a foundational pillar of democracy. This is precisely why the United States strictly upholds the separation of church and state and blocks state intervention in religious affairs.

However, the Korean government's actions appear to involve direct state intrusion into the legitimate activities of a religious leader. This should be a real red flag to American leaders.

Your gift today can protect the fundamental right to believe.

Right now in South Korea, people of faith are facing intimidation, unjust detentions, and a growing climate of fear simply for practicing their religion. When a democratic nation begins to silence spiritual voices, it sends a message that no believer is safe. That's why your support matters.

By donating, you empower international awareness campaigns and on-the-ground efforts that defend innocent people and expose human rights violations. You help give families hope, amplify the truth to global audiences, and ensure that those suffering in silence are not forgotten.

Religious freedom is not just a local issue—it's a universal human right. Your contribution can help stop injustice before it spreads further. Stand with those whose voices are being suppressed. Stand for freedom.

Your generosity can make the difference between oppression and hope.

ALERT: @newtgingrich just printed an op-ed in three major Korean Newspapers. When America's former Speaker of the House has to remind Seoul that free nations don't jail faith leaders, you know the crisis has gone too far.

by Newt Gingrich

The recent arrest of Unification Church President Dr. Hak Ja Han is more than a religious matter.

It raises serious questions about democratic values, religious freedom, and civic space in a key ally of the United States.

For decades in the U.S. Congress and public life, I have consistently emphasized that religious freedom, human rights, and democracy are essential to global stability.

From that perspective, the judicial actions taken by the Korean government should not be regarded lightly.

In free societies, religious leaders are not arrested for their religious activities or the way they run their church. To do so, would constitute a direct infringement of the core democratic principle of freedom of religion and conscience.

Religious freedom specifically is a foundational pillar of democracy. This is precisely why the United States strictly upholds the separation of church and state and blocks state intervention in religious affairs.

However, the Korean government's actions appear to involve direct state intrusion into the legitimate activities of a religious leader. This should be a real red flag to American leaders.

Dr. Han has led a faith community for many decades, and her work fundamentally belongs to the religious sphere. The moment the government attempts to intervene in that sphere, the principles of Korean democracy are shaken.

This action has also drawn international criticism as an example of excessive use of state power.

There is a clear course of action that Korean judicial authorities should take. They should withdraw the excessive detention measures against Dr. Han (who has not been convicted of any crimes) and immediately release her. This would reaffirm the principles of freedom that Korea's democracy has long upheld.

Korea and the United States are not merely allies. They are nations bound together through shared values of freedom. To preserve those values, Korea must not set a shameful precedent of violating religious freedom.

I must also highlight the international concern regarding the politicization too far.

Korea and the United States are not merely allies. They are nations bound together through shared values of freedom. To preserve those values, Korea must not set a shameful precedent of violating religious freedom.

I must also highlight the international concern regarding the politicization of Korea's judicial system.

One of the most dangerous signs in any democracy is "selective justice"—and the politicization of law enforcement.

Finally, the contributions of the Unification Church must also be recognized. For decades, the church has engaged in public-interest work such as promoting peace on the Korean Peninsula, easing inter-Korean tensions, facilitating cultural exchange through international marriage, and conducting large-scale global volunteer initiatives.

While controversies and criticism have existed, hastily labeling such an organization and its leader as a criminal group is a grave misjudgment. Dr. Han is 82 years old and has long been an international advocate for peace, family values, and interfaith dialogue. Detaining her raises obvious concerns about fairness, proportionality, and the public interest. The arrest of a religious leader in these circumstances risks provoking new social conflict, wasting national energy, and eroding of the spirit of tolerance that should define a democratic society.

I strongly urge the Korean government and judiciary to reconsider their actions and to handle this matter in accordance with democratic standards.

Pre-trial detention should be a last resort, especially for an elderly religious leader. Its humanitarian and societal consequences must be carefully weighed.

The United States understands well the principles that a free society must protect.
Korea, too, shares this philosophy.

I hope that both nations reaffirm their common values and that this incident, rather than weakening Korean democracy, becomes an opportunity to strengthen it.
The case of Dr. Han isn't an isolated issue concerning one religious group. It is a test of democracy, religious freedom, and national dignity.

I sincerely hope that Korea passes this test wisely, and I once again call upon the Korean government and President Lee Jae-myung to make the right decision.
