Date: Friday 20 November 2020

Time: 16:00 CET or 10:00 EST

The language of the webinar will be English with translation into Russian.

The purpose of the conference is to discuss topical issues of peace and security on the Korean Peninsula. The situation there affects not only the Asia-Pacific region, but also many world processes, including the possibility of peaceful sustainable development in many countries.

2020 marks the 70th anniversary of the outbreak of the Korean War. Countless people sacrificed their lives under the banner of the United Nations or the banner of the Communist world. 70 years later, is a new Korean miracle possible - the unification of Korea into a single state?

2020 was a dramatic year for all mankind, as evidenced by the COVID-19 pandemic. Great changes are taking place in the fields of geopolitics, the world economy, at all levels of society. How has this influenced the prospects for peace on the Korean Peninsula?

Speakers:

Vladimir Petrovskiy is a chief researcher at the Russia-China Center of the Institute of Far Eastern Studies of the Russian Academy of Sciences. He holds a doctorate in political science and is a member of the Academy of Military Sciences of Russia and an expert on the Russian International Affairs Council. Dr. Petrovskiy was formerly the deputy head of the RIA Novosti news agency regional office in Beijing and a news producer at the BBC Russian Service. He is the author of four monographic books and numerous academic publications on the theory of international regimes, multilateral security arrangements in the post-Soviet space - both in Korea and the Asia-Pacific and Euro-Atlantic regions- , as well as on international peacekeeping and conflict resolution.

Harry J. Kazianis is a senior director at the Center for the National Interest, a Washington, D.C.-based national security think tank founded by President Richard Nixon. He also serves as executive editor of its publishing arm, The National Interest. In the past, Harry Kazianis served as a foreign policy adviser to the 2016 presidential campaign of Sen. Ted Cruz and as editor-and-chief of The Diplomat. He also holds a non-resident senior fellowship at the China Policy Institute, University of Nottingham, and a non-resident fellowship at the Center for Strategic and International Studies in Hawaii.
