Dr. Jennifer Okeke, Chairperson and Vice President in the National Women's Council of Ireland, recently met with Amanda Toumangelov and Masami Yasuda from the Women's Federation for World Peace (WFWP) Ireland. This initial meeting aimed to explore potential collaborations centred on shared values and initiatives promoting women's empowerment and social justice.

The participants discussed WFWP Ireland's ongoing activities, which focus on uplifting women through educational programmes, advocacy, and community engagement. Dr. Okeke outlined her role in the National Women's Council, emphasising its commitment to addressing issues such as gender equality and social inclusion.

The primary objective of the meeting was to establish a foundation for joint activities that leverage both organisations strengths. By fostering collaboration, they aim to develop initiatives that align with their mutual goals of enhancing women and roles in society and promoting peace. This meeting represented a significant step towards building a partnership that could create meaningful impact within the community.
