The core message was mothers at home matter and children matter and both have value, whether you educate at home or not or have different values to others, one should not be forced or looked upon differently if one has an alternative approach to the norm.

It was unique to have 4 mothers coming from different perspectives.

What went well: The honesty, vulnerability and sincerity of heart of each speaker and the engaging content. The content was about the real world, what mothers experience and its okay to feel motherhood, schooling etc is not easy at times. I thought there was a great sense of hope and new perspectives shown. What can I learn and improve?

Yes, as mothers we should always be an inspiration to our children striving to make the right actions with encouragement as encouragement is so important giving strength and love.

Some main points: we have to listen, and at times forgiveness is also needed which builds a foundation for peace and building loving strong relationships and through these relationships we make improvements within the family so all feel valued and loved because as mothers we are in a team raising a human being!!

The zoom event was also discussing the value of family choices, the current dilemma of the role of a mother versus the career of a mother. We shouldn't be dominated by money, feeling the pressure to leave our child and return back to work.

So overall there were many valuable points addressed and it was a very uplifting event for all, whatever your age, race or country.
