Why We Fight the Way We Fight

by Myrna Lapres

Julie Schwartz Gottman, PhD says, “Conflict is connection. It’s how we figure out who we are, what we want, who our partners are and who they are becoming, and what they want. It’s how we bridge our differences and find our similarities, our points of connection. The problem is, we haven’t been taught how to do it right.” She and her husband John Gottman, PhD have spent years working with couples to understand how we can Fight Right. And they have discovered that there are three possible "conflict styles" within a healthy partnership: avoiding, validating, and volatile.
