

Core Values Academy High School Students Lecture on the Principles of Creation

April 22, 2017

Seattle, Washington: High School students from Seattle's Core Values Academy presented lectures for the community on Saturday, April 22. Working as partners or individually, lecturers addressed important topics including the characteristics of God, spirit world and the purpose of creation. Audience members included parents and CVA Middle School students who were engaged in question and answer sessions following each presentation. Brothers and sisters from Core Values for Life also attended, participating as evaluators for the evening, asking hard-hitting questions and sharing advice to improve presentation skills.

CVA High School teachers tallied up points from the evaluation to determine the top lecture team. Congratulations to the winning team: lecturers K. Mayoya and P. Kwak, with research and creative assistance from team member N. Mayoya.

CVA Principal Maruko Breland shared, "The purpose of this is to not just know it in our heads but to really embody it in our lives. I hope that the high schoolers feel a better sense of doing so after this experience."
