Kwun (22), Nevada

I study computer science at the University of Nevada in Las Vegas (UNLV). I'm from Hong Kong originally, and my family moved to the United States when I was twelve.

I met the church in September, 2010 through a missionary, attended the video center at the UNLV student union, and studied the Divine Principle over the next couple of months.

I think the Divine Principle makes sense and explains the symbols of the Bible. I studied the Bible in elementary school, and there was a lot I didn't understand, so I wasn't a very devoted Christian. The Divine Principle explained and clarified everything. The prime example is the human Fall, and the meaning of the apple. Is it a fruit? It was unclear to me before but the Divine Principle made it clear.

True Parents do a lot of great things to bring peace. Most religious leaders preach and don't do anything, but I can see that True Parents work hard to make peace a reality. I went to all their events in Las Vegas. I attend Sunday Service every week. I enjoy Rev. In Jin Moon's sermons. Sometimes she talks about True Family and this helps me understand how we should live our lives.

Abdul (35), Connecticut

Abdul is a doctoral student in computer science.

I grew up attending a mosque as well as Catholic worship services. When I came to study in the United States, I attended Mormon services. But I did not find real happiness until I found Lovin' Life Ministries. I met my spiritual mother, Hiromi, who asked me what I think about God. I answered, "God is omnipresent." Then she invited me to come to a Wednesday night program.

There, I heard that God is our Parent, and we are God's eternal sons and daughters. I started attending Sunday service, and I got to know the people and the teachings of global unity through the love of True Parents, centering on God. I realized that I've never seen such a wonderful movement. My heart was satisfied by the message and movement of Father Sun Myung Moon and Rev. In Jin Moon. I believe that they serve as one platform to unite the world.

I signed membership, and now I attend Sunday Service plus the Wednesday and Thursday evening programs. I am very happy to be a member.
