On the 17th January, Young Adults Ministry held its second 'What is your passion?' meeting, this time with the topic of 'education'.

Christabel, a graduate from Oxford University, is teaching at a school in West London, gave a presentation about why she is passionate about her role as a teacher of science.

She also shared about the 'Teach First Vision', which is a charity partnered with her school, which aims to break the link between wealth and educational success. It was inspiring to see Christabel is also able to incorporate principle values into her teaching, as her school and the teach first visions focuses's on raising children to be good people and not just educating them.

The meeting also gave us an opportunity to reflect and share about how through education and teaching can we impact others and inspire them to make a difference. As second generation, our principle values

The next What is your passion meeting will be in March with the topic of 'Banking and Finance'
